Eco-mafia and the illegal transport of hazardous waste in the high sea

Roberta Bellia

Illegal transport of hazardous waste: the search for a necessary political-criminal solution to a structural complexity

The research analyses the state of the art of European, internal and International environmental criminal law in the field of illicit waste trafficking.

The growing collective attention to environmental issues, linked to the increase in environmental crime, puts the legislator in front of a necessary imperative choice regarding the adoption of effective regulatory instruments.

In light of the complexity of the environmental issue, the changes in the phenomenon, the difficulties of typifying case and the limits of the harmonization of national legislation, the prospects for reform recently outlined are examined.
